Frequently Asked Questions

What are Outside Business Activities?

Outside Business Activity (OBA) is any activity (for or without Compensation) which is outside the scope of the staff member's responsibilities with Macquarie. OBAs cover a wide range of interests and include:

- Outside Employment or Engagements - Any engagement, external to a Staff member's role at Macquarie. This includes any form of employment with an organization other than Macquarie, acting as an independent contractor or consultant to an organization other than Macquarie; or being self-employed.
- External Directorships - Acting as a director, company secretary, senior officer, trustee, elected role (e.g., Treasurer, Chairman), member, partner, adviser or any position whereby decision-making or managerial activities are involved for any organization (profit or non-profit) other than Macquarie
- Personal Private Investment - investments in unlisted financial instruments (including unlisted securities, commercial property or investment vehicles (including investments in unlisted corporate entities)
- Political activities including activities for or without compensation.

Could you explain who would be considered a 'Macquarie Client'?

A 'Macquarie Client' is any party that Macquarie has a business relationship with. This could be an individual or a company. Examples include parties that we sell products to, provide services to or have business transactions / dealings with.

To the extent you are aware, this should also include potential clients of Macquarie, where Macquarie may have a business relationship with the referring party in the foreseeable future.

For the purposes of this form, Macquarie Clients do NOT include recruiters or Macquarie employees. This also does not require you to declare if you, a family member or a friend has a Macquarie personal finance product such as a personal banking account, home loan or car lease arrangement.

What are third-party business associates of Macquarie?

A third-party is any individual or entity (other than Macquarie staff and / or Macquarie owned companies) with whom Macquarie has or plans to enter into a business relationship. Examples of third-party business associates are suppliers, vendors, agents, distributors, intermediaries, brokers, Macquarie's accountants and / or auditors, lawyers etc.

For the purposes of this form, Macquarie third-party associates do NOT include recruiters or Macquarie employees.

How close does a connection with a third-party business associate or client need to be for the relationship to be disclosable?

We are primarily concerned about personal relationships that could create a perceived or actual conflict of interest. This will usually be the case where you have a reasonably close connection with the person. Please think carefully about whether a relationship presents a potential or actual risk of conflict. As a general rule, if you may act differently towards someone because of the relationship or if they may act differently towards you, or you are likely to be perceived as acting differently because of the relationship, you should disclose it.

Frequently Asked Questions

Where the relationship is with someone external to Macquarie, you should also consider how realistic the chance of a conflict is. Usually, this will only arise if you and the other party both work on Macquarie matters, and one of you has the ability or potential to be able to influence outcomes or actions. For example, conflicts may arise in scenarios where one of you has:

- authority to award work to the other, or agree their fee levels and / or contractual terms;
- influence over regulatory or licensing decisions for or relating to the other party;
- influence over tenders or commercial transactions that the other party is connected to.

I am a previous Macquarie employee and have several connections at Macquarie as a result. Do I need to declare all of these as Personal Relationships?

In most cases, you would not need to disclose details of all your contacts from previous employment with Macquarie. This includes if you have previously been an intern, graduate or temporary employee and are now returning to Macquarie in a permanent capacity. However, if you have a personal relationship that could create a conflict or perceived conflict (e.g. you have a personal relationship outside of Macquarie with your new line manager or the hiring manager that is recruiting you), that should be disclosed.

I am being seconded to Macquarie from another company that has connections with Macquarie. Do I need to declare this?

If you are on secondment to Macquarie from a company that has an existing relationship with Macquarie, you do not need to disclose all connections that you have because of that company's relationship with Macquarie.

A secondment arrangement is not deemed to be a 'referral' either, so you do not need to state that you were referred to the role by your employing entity.

I am part of a team that provides services to Macquarie. Do I need to provide details of my peers?

If you are providing work to Macquarie via an existing relationship (e.g. through an agency relationship or a consulting arrangement) and have peers from the same organization that are also providing the same or similar services to Macquarie, you do not need to disclose your peers as connections.

I have friends or family in another part of Macquarie, or another Macquarie location. Do I need to disclose that as a personal relationship?

We are primarily concerned about personal relationships that could create a perceived or actual conflict of interest. This will usually be the case where the relationship is with someone who is:

- a manager, supervisor, or is otherwise involved in decision-making about your promotions, remuneration or management (e.g. certain People and Culture staff may be involved in discussions around remuneration, promotions and management);
- in a control function (e.g. internal audit); or
- commonly works on different sides of an information barrier to you (which you may not know until you commence employment).

Note that if you live with another Macquarie staff member, this would also be disclosable upon joining Macquarie (even if the above scenarios don't apply) so that steps can be taken to ensure that you are both aware of the expectations that apply regarding information barriers and maintaining confidentiality.

If you have relationships with people at Macquarie who do not fall into these categories, they do not need to be disclosed unless you are aware of another reason for the relationship posing a conflict.

What if it's a friend of a friend, should I still disclose that?

As above, we are primarily concerned about personal relationships that could create a perceived or actual conflict of interest. This will usually be the case where you have a reasonably close connection with the person. Please think carefully about whether a relationship presents a potential or actual risk of conflict. As a general rule, if you may act differently towards someone because of the relationship or if you are likely to be perceived as acting differently towards someone because of the relationship, you should disclose it.

Frequently Asked Questions

What if I don't disclose a relationship in the recruitment process and later realise there is a potential issue?

Once you join Macquarie, if you realise there is a potential or actual conflict of interest as a result of any relationship you have, you can disclose that at the time to your manager, People and Culture partner or business Compliance contact. These escalation points will be available to you throughout your Macquarie career.

Do the Personal Investment Policy requirements only apply to me personally?

The Personal Investment Policy requirements apply to you and your Associates. Associates include:

- spouses, de facto partners, domestic partners, civil union partners, or any dependents under the age of 18;
- any other relative living in the same household unless financially independent;
- any other person whose investment decisions you have any influence on.

You may have Associates at Macquarie. It is your joint responsibility to notify your People & Culture partner of this once you join Macquarie.

How close does a connection with a third-party business associate or client need to be for the relationship to be disclosable?

We are primarily concerned about personal relationships that could create a perceived or actual conflict of interest. This will usually be the case where you have a reasonably close connection with the person. Please think carefully about whether a relationship presents a potential or actual risk of conflict.

Where the relationship is with someone internal to Macquarie, if the relationship may cause you to act differently towards someone or if the relationship may create a perception of a conflict, or a perception of preferential treatment, you should disclose it.

Where the relationship is with someone external to Macquarie, you should also consider if it creates an actual conflict or if it could be perceived as a conflict. This may arise if you and the other party both work on Macquarie matters, and one of you has the ability or potential to be able to influence outcomes or actions. For example, conflicts may arise in scenarios where one of you has:

- authority to award work to the other, agree their fee levels and / or contractual terms;
- influence over regulatory or licensing decisions for or relating to the other party;
- influence over tenders or commercial transactions that the other party is connected to.
